Definitions

Term Means Bullying is unwelcome and unreasonable behaviour that is repeated. This includes Bullying cyber-bullying Unreasonable behaviour means actions that a reasonable person in the same circumstances would see as unreasonable. It includes victimising, humiliating, intimidating or threatening a person. Repeated behaviour is persistent and can involve a range of actions over time. A single incident of unreasonable behaviour is not considered Bullying, but it could escalate if repeated and should not be ignored. Cyber-bullying is the use of electronic communication to bully, harass or frighten a person, typically by sending messages of an intimidating, embarrassing or threatening nature. Bullying includes, but is not limited to: verbal abuse; yelling, using profanities/foul language spreading malicious rumour, gossip, or innuendo belittling a person's opinions excluding, isolating or ignoring someone intimidating a person – using psychological, physical or emotional forms undermining or deliberately impeding a person's work overloading, or unreasonably denying, or starving a person of responsibility establishing impossible deadlines that will set up the individual to fail physically threatening abuse/aggressive body language making jokes that are 'obviously offensive' unjustifiably blocking applications for training, leave or promotion Bullying is not: One-off or occasional instances of forgetfulness, rudeness or tactlessness. Setting performance agreements because of academic performance or disciplinary outcome. Constructive feedback and legitimate advice. A lecturer requiring reasonable verbal or written academic instructions to be carried Warning or disciplining a Student in line with the Student Disciplinary Statute. A single incident of unreasonable behaviour (but could escalate if repeated) Action undertaken in an appropriate manner to transfer, discipline, advise, manage,

counsel or expel a Student.

Term Means Discrimination is when a person is treated less favourably than another person in the Discrimination same or similar circumstances because of any of the prohibited grounds and may be unlawful. The prohibited grounds are: sex, (which includes for example pregnancy and childbirth); gender identification; marital status; religious belief; ethical belief; colour; ethnic or national origins, which includes nationality or citizenship; disability; age; political opinion; employment status; family status; sexual orientation; and union involvement. Both the Human Rights Act and the New Zealand Bill of Rights Act recognise that to overcome Discrimination positive actions may be needed to enable particular groups to achieve equal outcomes with other groups in society. They are not discriminatory if the purpose is to achieve equality. Groups of people that may be entitled to special measures are linked by one of the grounds of unlawful Discrimination in the Human Rights Act (e.g., sex, ethnicity, disability) e.g., programme entry quotas for Māori and Pacific Students. It is plain and obvious to a reasonable person that the complaint amounts to an abuse of Frivolous or the right to make a complaint. It is important to note that the complaint, not the Vexatious complainant, must be vexatious. The following factors may be relevant in determining whether the complaint is frivolous or vexatious. A complaint is more likely to be considered frivolous or vexatious if: It lacks any serious purpose or value. If the complainant has explicitly stated that their intention is to cause disruption, irritation or distress to the organisation or its staff. If it causes unreasonable harassment or distress, e.g., includes derogatory remarks about staff. The harassment or distress must be unreasonable. The organisation will have to deal with frustrated people from time to time, and they can expect to face a certain level of criticism. The language and tone of the complaint are aggressive, offensive, or abusive, e.g., threats have been made against staff, or racist language is used.
